

The University of Baltimore School of Law Library is hiring! We have an open position for a Reference and Instructional Services Librarian. The Reference and Instructional Services Librarian is an open rank position. We are interested in all qualified candidates regardless of experience level.

The Reference and Instructional Services Librarian will teach in the legal research and citation component of Introduction to Lawyering Skills, Introduction to Advocacy, and the Legal Research Workshop. At UBalt Law we provide instruction in a variety of formats, including fully online, hybrid or blended, and face-to-face instruction. There are also plenty of opportunities to provide additional research instruction to law students through course-specific in-class lectures, topical workshops, and programs in conjunction with law school student services and career development.

Additionally, the reference and instructional services librarian is part of the team that provides extensive library services to faculty, staff, student publications, and organizations, supporting their scholarship, teaching, and administrative duties. Promoting and providing research services for law school faculty is a key responsibility of this position. The librarian in this role will collaborate with faculty members providing extensive research support and increasing the impact of their scholarly publications.

The successful candidate is expected to participate in professional, scholarly, and service activities, and be responsible for special projects as needed.

Expected Salary Range: $65,000-$78,000

Please reach out to me if you have any questions or would like more information about the position. cpipins@ubalt.edu

For more information or to apply, click here: <http://www.ubalt.edu/about-ub/offices-and-services/human-resources/jobs-at-ub.cfm?&posting=1810>